SURVIVING WATERLOO VETERANS.

The surviving officers and soldiers of the famous campaign which brought the greatest soldier of modern times to a miserable exile in the far Atlantic, and a lonely grave five years later in the valley of Longwood, are now few and rapidly becoming fewer every year. A few years hence and not one will remain to tell from personal observation of the desperate assault and defence which decided the destiny of France alone, but of Europe. The chief actors on that bloody field have long since passed away—the Iron Duke the gruff Prussian Field Marshal, the Man of Destiny, and the bravest of the brave.

Not many years ago the English officers who took part in the memorable battle of Waterloo could be counted by the hundred. The following comprise all that now are left: One field marshal, nine generals, five lieutenant generals, three major generals, five colonels, seven lieutenant colonels, five majors, seven captains, twelve lieutenants, two paymasters, one quartermaster, one surgeon major, two surgeons and two assistant surgeons, making a total of sixty-two. It must be borne in mind, however, that most of those who now hold high rank in the above enumeration have attained it by subsequent service and promotion. Sir William Gomm, for example, now field marshal, served at Waterloo as quartermaster to General Picton's division. Of these, two colonels, five lieutenant colonels and four majors have retired from the army at different times by the sale of their commissions. Of those who actually remain in the service, and of those on half pay, seven are still captains and twelve lieutenants. Field Marshal Sir Wm. Gomm, late Commander-in-Chief of the East India Company's forces, and now Constable of the Tower, is in his ninety-first year. General Sir George Bowles, Lieutenant of the Tower, was born in 1787—the year the Federal Constitution was adopted—and General Sir William Rowan, late commander of the forces in Canada, was born in 1789. Marshal Gomm and General Bowles were at the bombardment of Copenhagen in 1807. Marshal Gomm was present and participated in the battle of Corunna, where Sir John Moore fell in 1809. These three are old comrades. They all participated in the unfortunate Walcheren expedition, and the former was at Flushing. Lieutenant General Smith, born in 1792, served in the navy before entering the army. General Sir Thomas Read was wounded at Ferozeshah, and is the only one of the sixty-two survivors who aided in quelling the Indian mutiny in 1857. General Lord Rokeby, colonel of the 7th foot, born in 1793, is the only surviving Waterloo officer who fought side by side in the Crimea with the foe whom he assisted to vanquish at Waterloo. Sir William Gomm is the only survivor of Rodeau, fought in 1808. Lieutenant Colonel Drought and Paymaster Hillard are the only survivors of Albuera, one of the hardest fought fields of the Peninsular war. At the close of the battle, when the roll was called, three privates and a drummer were all who answered of the "Buffs." Sir William Gomm and Sir Charles York were at Vimiera, and Sir Charles Bowles was at Talavera. Three were at Busaco, four at Fuentes d'Onor, five at Ciudad Rodrigo, seven at the siege and storming of Badajoz, eleven at Salamanca, and twelve at the famous battle of Vittoria, where "The English rose was no'er so red, The shroud shook in gory bed, But the Scottish thistle reared its head And smiled upon Vittoria."

Four were at the passage of the Bidassoa, fourteen at Nivelle, eleven at Nive, eleven at Orthes, and thirteen at Toulouse. Fourteen were at Quatre Bras and five at the capitulation of Paris. These old veterans assemble, as many of them as can get together, every year on the anniversary of Waterloo. The roll is shortening, and ere many more years pass the roll call will cease. No distinction, however great, can exempt from the fate which awaits all.

"The boast of heraldry, the pomp of power,
And all that beauty, all that wealth e'er gave,
Await alike the inevitable grave,
The path of glory leads but to the grave."

A writer in a late number of All the Year Round has discovered that the seeming nonsense choruses of many old English ballads are in reality the remnants of the songs sung by the ancient Britons in the celebration of their sun worship. "Fal-la, la," is written in Welsh "Fal, la," fal meaning a circle or sun, and la a day, both words expressing the completion of a day. As the Druids marched around their stone circles, like those still discernable at Stonehenge and on the Sussex downs, they chanted their meaningful choruses, "Fal-la, fal-la," as the god they worshipped sank behind the western hills. So "Down, down, derry down" in original is "Dun, dun, deragan dun," and it means "To the hill, to the oaks, to the hill," and was therefore a call to worship. The old Briton poet, George Withers, used another of these Druidical choruses in one of his pleasant ditties:

There was a lass, a fair one,
As fair as o'er was seen,
She was indeed a rare one,
Another Sheba Queen;
But fool, as I was,
I thought she loved me true,
But now, alas! she's left me,
Fal, lero, lero, loo!

The original of this refrain was "Fal, lero," and it hailed the sun rising above the sea. "Toral, loral," "Hig trollelo," and many other of these apparently meaningless burdens to old songs have similar curious origin.

JAPANESE WOMEN.—Naturally, there are no figures more perfect than those of the Japanese young women. The children, up to the age of fourteen, or as long as they have the free use of their limbs, are models of symmetry. About that time they begin to fasten long garments about their hips, the effect of which is to impede their gait, and give them an awkward shamble. In course of time it does worse, and interrupts the development of their legs and thighs. Among the laboring classes, an additional misshaping is accomplished by the practice of carrying burdens from an early age, upon the back, for the support of which broad straps are passed over the shoulders and crossed in front, pressing directly upon the breasts. When a Japanese girl reaches the age of sixteen without having undergone either of those processes of deformity, she is a wonder to the eye, and remains so until twenty-five, or possibly a little later. Then she ceases to charm, for a certain period, in any way excepting by her manner, and that is generally preserved to the last. But as she grows old she has a chance of becoming quite delightful again. There is nothing nicer than a dignified and white-haired old Japanese lady. She is always happy, for she is always much respected and cherished by her youngsters, and at a certain age the natural high breeding of the race appears in her to attain its crystallization. Whatever her station in life she is almost always sure to suggest an idea of ancient nobility, and to be surrounded by the atmosphere of an Oriental Fanbourg St. Germain.
